Herbs that Warm the Interior and Expel Cold

These herbs treat interior cold (excess or deficiency, either internally-generated or from and external attack that goes to the organs).

Signs and symptoms will depend on which organ is affected:

- Spleen: nausea/vomiting, diarrhea (thin, watery, no strong smell)
- Kidney: frequent, profuse clear urination; urinary retention
- Liver: painful menses, hernia, pain and contraction of testicles
- Lung: cough with profuse, thin, clear phlegm that is foamy, bubbly, or stringy
- Heart: palpitations, chest oppression, cold limbs
- Yang Collapse: sweating, cold limbs, lying in curled-up position, lassitude

Slow, tight pulse; pale or blue tongue.

Caution: Herbs in this category tend to be warm, acrid, and dry, and may cause internal heat accumulation and damage yin and blood.

- The aconite plant has two roots - a main root and an accessory root.
- Fu Zi is the accessory root or daughter root (radix lateralis)
- The main root used to be called Wu Tou ("raven's head"). We now distinguish two varieties:
 - Chaun Wu (aconiti radix) - Sichuan aconite
 - Cao Wu (aconiti kusnezoffi radix) - wild aconite

- Fu Zi, Chuan Wu, and Cao Wu all belong to the category Herbs that Warm the Interior, and they are all extremely toxic. They are never used internally in their raw form.
- Zhi Fu Zi is better at warming the interior and treating cold. Zhi Chuan Wu and Zhi Cao Wu are better at treating wind and bi syndrome.
- Zhi Cao Wu is even stronger and more acrid than Zhi Chaun Wu. It “scours out wind” to treat stubborn bi syndrome, and it should not be used lightly. It is used almost exclusively as a topical application.

Fu Zi, Wu Tou, Chuan Wu, and Cao Wu are incompatible with:
Bei Mu, Zhi Ban Xia, Bai Ji, Gua Lou, Bai Lian, and Xi Jiao
